nucleotide metabolism oncogene induced senescence and cancer Introduction. Nucleotides are necessary for a variety of cellular processes. Role of nucleotide metabolism in oncogene-induced senescence. Nucleotide metabolism and imbalances in dNTP pools have long been known to play a role in a variety of human pathologies [1–4]. Nucleotide metabolism in ...

nucleotide metabolism oncogene induced senescence and cancer Oncogene-induced senescence (OIS) occurs when an oncogene (such as RAS or BRAF) becomes activated in a primary (normal) mammalian cell [27]. Paradoxically, expression of an activated oncogene leads to a cell cycle exit and sustained growth arrest [28]. OIS is therefore considered a bona fide tumor suppressor mechanism in vivo[24], [29].

Nucleotide metabolism, oncogene-induced senescence and nucleotide metabolism oncogene induced senescence and cancer Recent evidence shows that RRM2 plays a key role in the oncogene-induced senescence (OIS) mechanism and introduces nucleotide metabolism as an important new pathway regulating OIS [58]. If RRM2 is ...

nucleotide metabolism oncogene induced senescence and cancer It was recently reported however that perturbation of the nucleotide metabolism can be added into these already “classic” inducers. The early observations by Mannava et al., and Liu et al , established evidence of a cause-effect relationship between C-MYC, the oncogene that is capable of suppressing senescence and nucleotide metabolism. The ...

Perturbation of nucleotide metabolism - the driving force

nucleotide metabolism oncogene induced senescence and cancer Regulation of deoxynucleotide metabolism is required for YAP-induced cell growth and underlies the resistance of YAP-addicted cells to chemotherapeutics targeting dNTP synthesis. During RAS-induced senescence, YAP/TAZ bypass RAS-mediated inhibition of nucleotide metabolism and control senescence.

dNTP metabolism links mechanical cues and YAP/TAZ to cell nucleotide metabolism oncogene induced senescence and cancer Perturbation of nucleotide metabolism - the driving force of oncogene-induced senescence Zbigniew Darzynkiewicz Induction of premature (stress induced) cellular senescence of normal cells provides the mechanism eliminating proliferative capability of potentially carcinogenic cells and thereby is considered to be a barrier preventing neoplastic

nucleotide metabolism oncogene induced senescence and cancer Most pancreatic ductal adenocarcinomas contain activated KRAS mutations required for cancer initiation and maintenance. Here, Hu et al. show that high glucose promotes O-GlcNAcylation on ribonucleotide reductase, leading to nucleotide pool imbalance and KRAS mutations preferentially in pancreatic cells.
